Local Revenue Measure Results
November 2026

There were over 470 measures on local ballots in California for the November 3, 2026 election, including 331 local tax-related measures.

Nearly half (157) were proposed by or for cities●. About a third of all tax measures (115) were school● tax or bond measures. There were also 20 county● and 39 special district● measures. Among the measures were 104 general obligation bonds, including 95 school bonds. There were 78 measures to increase or extend local sales taxes, 78 parcel taxes, and 34 lodging occupancy tax increases.

Overall Passage Rates

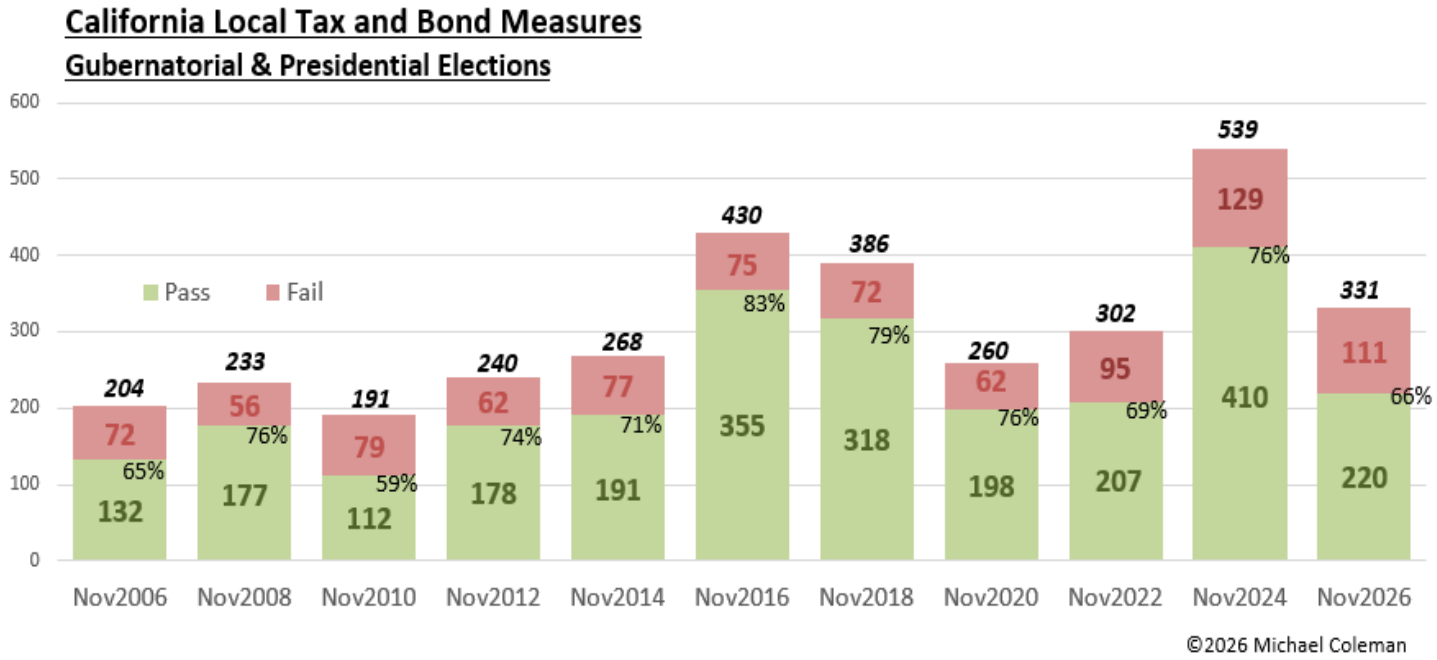

After tallying 7.92 million ballots, with millions more still to be counted, most contests are decided but dozens remain too close to call. At this point, it appears that 220 of the 331 tax and bond measures have passed. The overall (preliminary) 66 percent passage rate is within the range of preliminary election night results of the last few election cycles. However, several dozen of these measures - including over 20 school bonds - are too close to call and the results will very likely change when all votes are tallied.

Preliminary Election Night Returns

Measure Outcome by Category

School bonds are typically the most common local tax measure. In this election there were 95 measures requesting $17.6 billion of bond authorizations. There were 131 city or county general purpose majority vote tax measures (sales taxes, business operations taxes, lodging occupancy taxes, etc.) with an overall 82 percent passage rate. There were 20 initiative majority vote special taxes and 14 appear to have passed (70 percent). City, county and special district special taxes, including parcel taxes, requiring two-thirds voter approval, fared worse with just 57 percent passing.

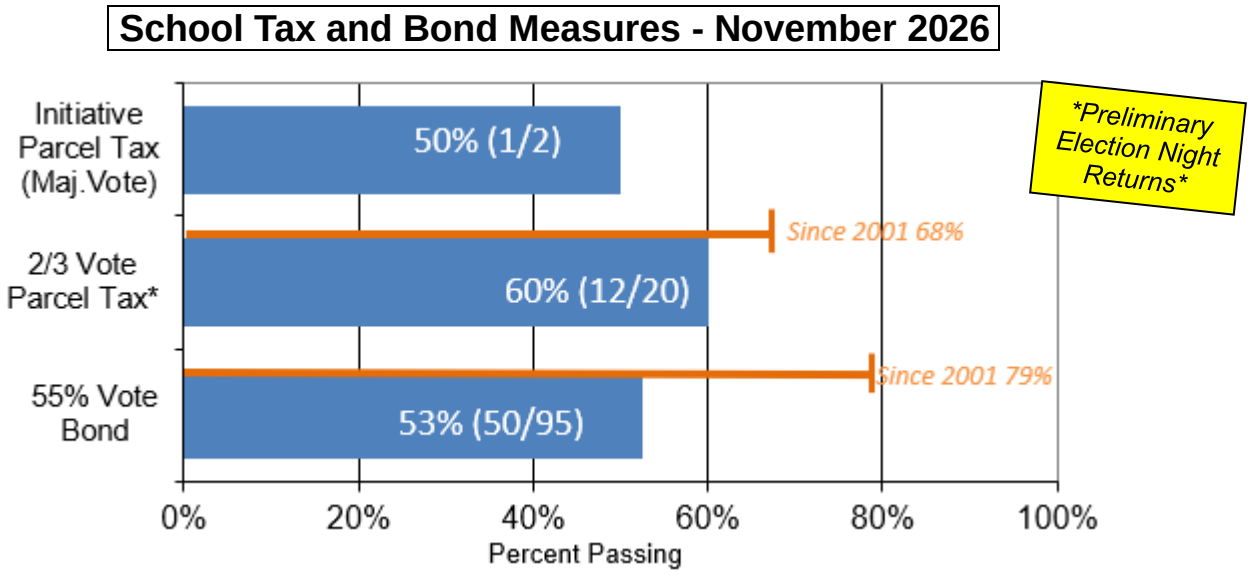

Passing and Failing Measures by Type November 2026

Includes city, county, special district and school measures
A "general tax" requires majority approval, a "special tax" requires 2/3 approval, an "initiative special tax" requires majority approval.

School Measures

There were 95 school bond measures this election, all requiring 55 percent voter approval. Over 20 measures trail by just a few percentage points. In past elections, late-counted ballots have increased most approval rates by several percentage points, pushing such close measures over the threshold to passing. It appears that 50 measures have passed but many more may pass when final votes are tallied and certified. Of the more than $17.6 billion proposed, at least $12.7 billion is on the way to approval, including $3.5 billion for San Diego Unified School District, the largest measure this election.

There were also seven special sales tax measures qualified through citizen initiative. Under a 2020 court ruling, these measures require majority voter approval for passage. The five-county "Public Transit Revenue Measure District" sales tax supports Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART) with a $1 billion revenue boost to its struggling finances. Canyon Lake's measure, a repeat of a similar measure that failed in 2024, also would have restricted various other city revenues exclusively for police and fire services.

Other Measures of Note

- Measures to impose term limits passed easily in five cities, a hospital district and a school district. Voters in Lake Forest turned back a measure to repeal their term limits.
- Initiative measures to repeal taxes and fees failed in Bear Valley.
- There were measures in 11 cities to change elected city clerk and/or treasurer positions to appointed (by city council or manager). Five are passing and three more are narrowly behind.
- McFarland and Rosemead became charter cities but Orange and Benicia voters turned down city charter measures.
- Voters in the County of Los Angeles, ignoring the lessons of the Vallejo and Stockton bankruptcies, approved a provision for binding arbitration for police and fire labor agreements.
